in a nutshell

- I'm a performing artist, mainly. I do improvisational theater and live visuals. Right now I'm getting an MS in Integrated Digital Media at Polytechnic University. My main project at IDMI is Kids Connect, a series of summer workshops teaching improvisation, storytelling, audio/visual performance and online collaboration (with video streams and in Second Life) to teens in New York and Amsterdam. I'm a co-organizer of Share, an open jam for audio/visual artists held every Sunday in the East Village, NYC.

While I'm writing my thesis paper today, I'm listening to Marseilles, France. A dog barked a moment ago, as if at someone or something (a man, a squirrel, a leaf) was getting too close to its yard. The audio is being streamed as part of the locus sonus project, which has set up a network of microphones streaming from around the world. Go to their site to listen and mix the streams.

We have a locus sonus here at IDMI — before I started writing today, I helped Hans move the microphone to better capture the sounds from the square outside. Back to writing now.

Addendum

Congratulations, Ross! Mr. Ross White will be teaching a poetry writing class at UNC Chapel Hill this fall. I've been lucky to know a handful of great teachers and Ross is one of them. His students will be lucky to have him.
